Attorney Shields followed and stated that the offense was committed in 19e7, and the first complaint was drawn 17 months afterwards. The defendants were tried and acquitted in the city court here, the city court judge holding that it was within his jurisdiction. Then the state attorney presented an information in the matter and the case came to the superior court. He claimed that the city court had jurisdiction in the case and that the state's attorney could not take it up until it had come from that court by appeal or binding over.
